The Global Health Research Lab seeks motivated and reliable research assistant(s) interested in gaining experience in global health research. The research conducted in this lab focuses on social and structural determinants of HIV and reproductive health outcomes in low-resource settings.

Interns/volunteers will have the opportunity to engage in research activities related to two ongoing NIH-sponsored research projects focused on the development and evaluation of community and health systems interventions to increase contraceptive use and improve HIV services in Uganda.

POSSIBLE TASKS INCLUDE:
- Create intervention and other study materials
- Qualitative and quantitative data management and analysis
- Program computer-based data collection tools
- Conduct literature reviews
- Assist in the preparation of reports, presentations, and scientific journal articles

Interested students should contact Dr. Katelyn Sileo at katelyn.sileo@utsa.edu